

GEOG 4350 – Geomorphology is the study of the landforms that make up the surface of the Earth. The organization of the course reflects the four main controls on landform development: large scale geologic structures; lithology; erosional and depositional processes; influence of past events. The final two lectures cover a selection of applied geomorphology topics.